

Since Sinclair Broadcasting's has decided to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election, it is up to the FCC to level the playing field and require that Sinclair also allow an anti-Bush documentary of equal length be aired during the same time periods as the Kerry documentary. That is what the law requires, and it is up to you, the FCC, to ensure that the law is met, especially during a crucial election cycle.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. Obviously, this is no longer true, if the FCC allows this travesty to go forward without challenge. If the FCC allows Sinclair to get away with this, then the election laws, fairness, and the FCC are but hollow, meaningless bits of nothing. When large companies control a significant portion of the airwaves, which they pay very little for, those companies have a duty to the public. It is up to the FCC to ensure that that duty is met.
will you do it?
I doubt it.
Thank you.
